REPRINT OF THE PRIZE-WINNING LETTER.

You are doing a most uplifting work among advertisers, and now if you can hit the cranks who buy as hard as you hit the crooks who sell you will be doing a perfect work all around. That was a good idea the other day of yours in putting in big, black letters this quotation from a letter from the Rogers Peet Company: "It is rather a difficult matter to satisfy customers who don't let their dealer know their dissatisfaction," and it should be plastered all over a let of people I know, who have the habit of reckless condemnation of whatever goes not quite suit them and who go about backcapping firms which never failed to square with a customer if they were given the opportunity. It is astonishing how many I have counted up, and in almost every instance they continue to patronise the firms they condemn. Only yesterday I met two who were narrating their wors in the very store where they had been so abused, and when I asked them if they had complained to the firm and asked for satisfaction, both said they had not, and didn't because they did not like to go to the trouble. When I asked them why, then, they condemned without giving the firm a fair trial, but asked them if they had a right to say what they pleased if they were not suited, and when I asked them if they had a right to slander and injure the good name of raid they had a right to say what they pleased if they were not suited, and when I asked them if they had a right to slander and injure the good name of reputable and innocent parties they became indignant and insisted that they were doing nothing of the kind. I proceeded next to show them that they were, and how they were, and they said they had never thought of it that way, and I told them to try hereafter and think that way, and if they could not restrain their feelings to say something, to make the effort to say the best thing they could, instead of the worst. I thought they would resent my plain speaking, but they did not, and showed me that they really didn't mean what they said by spending about $50 between them on what they were there for.

Every reputable firm has many just such customers, who, while they are friends financially, are foes in their reckless habit of speech, and do an amount of harm the money they spend cannot rectify. Of course, they talk in the same thoughtless and unjust way about other things which do not please them, but, as a rule, nothing suffers so from this sort of backbiting as business, for business suffers, morally and financially. I feel sure that in the majority of instances, proved by continued patronage of firms, they would be more careful of what they said, or would say nothing until they had given the offending firms as chance to have their say. This reckless disregard of the rights of others in speech is a wretched habit, offence habit than malice, and if the offenders were sued for slander and brought to bur they would plead no intention. Therefore, Mr. Ad-Visor, as it is a habit, maybe you can thump the victims of it into a better frame of mind and a better course of conduct. Anyway, there is no tening the angelous products.

CHURCH FAILS TO ACT IN TINSDALE'S CASE

Ask Reinstatement.

Edmund J. Tinsdale, lawyer and member of the Calvary Baptist Church, member of the Calviry Baptist Church, was to have been the chief topic of discussion at the regular monthly meeting of the board of deacons of the church last night. But the exciting developments looked for did not materialize. A quorum of the board failed to appear. It is likely nothing will be done until Sunday morning. Mr. Tinsdale, having recently made charges of scandal concerning a former employe and a former officer of the church, was himself charged bit the board of trustees with "inconsistency" and with trying to disturb the cncy" and with trying to disturb the peace of the church.

Answering the expulsion threatened him, Tinsdale obtained an injunction from the Supreme Court, which may be made permanent on Friday. It is said at the church that, rather than drag things into unseemly gossip, the board of deacons will, either on Sunday next or Wednesday next, recommend the reinstatement of Mr. Tinsdale.

The students of the Niagara Falls High School and of the Niagara Falls High School and of the Niagara University were also in line. One of the features of the parade was the marching of hundreds of women hearing emblems of preparedness. Following the parade a speech was delivered on preparedness by Colonel Ned Alden Flood of New York.
